Rewriting history in the image of ridiculousness...

I'd like to meet the person who invented the word and erase that person from history long before the damage is done to later usurp that person's place and then carefully replace each and every word with the names of a multitude of different cheeses

... would that be so wrong?